The Epic of Carthage, from the Northern Shores to the Gates of the Sahara

Far more than a simple maritime city, Carthage embodied a true “network empire,” whose influence extended deeply across the Tunisian territory.

“Carthage Event Shows 2026” is part of this historical dynamic, offering a contemporary reinterpretation of this strategic geography, linking the Punic coastline to the southern oases, true overland crossroads of Antiquity.

Southern Tunisia: A Strategic Pillar of Carthaginian Power

The prosperity of Carthage was founded upon a remarkable command of caravan routes and trans-Saharan trade exchanges:

- Tozeur (ancient Thuzuros): a vital hub of African trade and a convergence point for the continent's wealth — gold, ivory, and precious materials — before their distribution throughout the Mediterranean basin.
- Douz and the Nefzaoua region: a strategic frontier area, shaped by alliances with the Libyco-Berber populations, guardians of access to the desert and providers of resources emblematic of Carthaginian power.
- Djerba: an island in southern Tunisia, renowned for its beaches and authenticity. It is also part of the heritage of the great Mediterranean civilizations, particularly the Carthaginian influence that shaped the history of the region. Combining culture, traditions, and unique landscapes, it offers a rich and exotic setting.

A symbolic staging: a bridge between past and future Through the deployment of hot air balloons over Carthage, Tozeur and Djerba, the event creates a strong visual narrative:

- A vertical dimension: embodying elevation, innovation, and the ambition of a Tunisia oriented toward the future.
- A horizontal dimension: illustrating territorial continuity and the logistical ingenuity of ancient civilizations, pioneers of intercontinental exchanges.

A clear ambition: enhancing Tunisian heritage

The Carthage Event Shows 2026 transforms this historical legacy into a driver of international visibility. It aims to promote a modern Tunisia, proud of its plural identity, capable of leveraging its past to inspire innovation in tourism, culture, and technology.

Tunisia takes flight: Tourism and emotions in the desert

They boost local tourism by increasing occupancy rates in accommodation facilities and enhancing cultural and artisanal activities, while also creating economic opportunities for regional stakeholders.

On an international scale, these events benefit from strong media visibility thanks to widely circulated spectacular imagery.

A renewed vision for Tunisian tourism

Tourism has for several decades represented a strategic sector of the Tunisian economy, contributing to growth, job creation, regional development, as well as the country's international visibility. Thanks to the richness of its historical heritage, the diversity of its landscapes, and the quality of its hospitality, Tunisia stands out as one of the leading destinations in the Mediterranean basin.

However, in response to the rapid evolution of global tourism trends, marked by more demanding expectations and a search for authentic experiences, destinations are being led to rethink their models. Today's travelers favor stays that are more meaningful, focused on cultural discovery, local immersion, personalized itineraries, and environmental sustainability.

In this context, Tunisia is committed to a process of transformation and diversification of its tourism offering in order to strengthen the destination's competitiveness and enhance its natural, cultural, and human assets.

This evolution aims to promote higher-quality tourism, generating added value and fostering balanced development across regions.

This dynamic is based on the adoption of innovative tourism models that meet the expectations of modern travelers, particularly through the development of individual tourism and sustainable tourism, two complementary approaches with strong potential.

Individual tourism is based on the personalization of the travel experience, offering visitors the freedom to design their stays according to their interests, with flexible itineraries, a variety of activities, and diverse accommodation options. It also promotes lesser-known destinations.

In parallel, sustainable tourism is emerging as a key pillar for the future of the sector in Tunisia. It aims to reconcile tourist appeal with the preservation of natural resources and the enhancement of heritage, through responsible practices and the involvement of local communities.

This approach enables a deeper exploration of the territory and direct interaction with local populations, while highlighting cultural and natural assets that are often overlooked.

By integrating these new directions, Tunisia aims to develop a more resilient, competitive tourism model that is better adapted to contemporary challenges.

This transformation helps diversify the national offering while strengthening the image of an authentic, innovative destination committed to a sustainable development approach.

Thus, the combination of individual tourism and sustainable tourism opens up new perspectives for the sector, offering richer experiences for visitors.

AERO-DIPLOMACY 2026

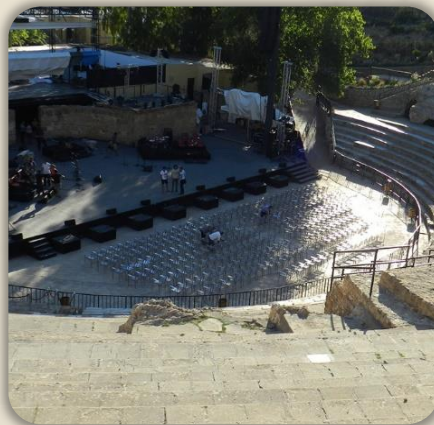

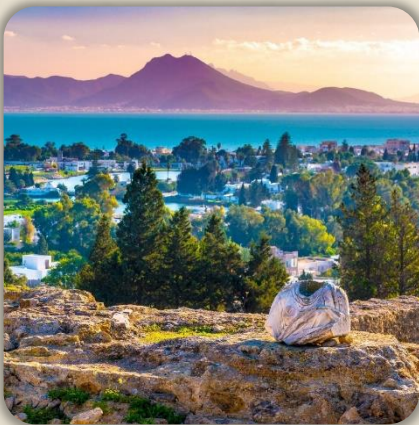

The Economics of Aviation: Emerging Careers in Tourism

The AERO-STRATEGY 2026 forum, held under the theme “Air Economy: The New Professions of Tourism,” represents a structuring lever for promoting innovative economic and tourism diplomacy, based on the development of aeronautical skills. The success of sustainable air tourism relies on the complementarity of the stakeholders involved: public authorities and regulatory bodies ensure the establishment of a favorable strategic and legislative framework, while economic diplomacy actors facilitate international cooperation, know-how transfer, and investment attraction. Professionals from the aviation and tourism sectors provide essential operational expertise to anticipate market developments and identify emerging professions.

At the same time, academic institutions and training centers play a decisive role in structuring a national training system adapted to the sector’s requirements. This synergy among stakeholders is therefore key to building a high-performing, sustainable, and competitive ecosystem capable of positioning air tourism as a driver of international visibility and economic growth.
